I am married to a USC for over 10 years and because of my complicated immigration case, I was unable to adjust my status all these years. My USC husband's petition was denied 2 times, as well as his hardship waiver application and the succeeding appeal to that waiver.

During the years I was unable to adjust my status, we have been with 3 different immigration lawyers since my USC husband started his immediate relative petition for me. The first lawyer my husband and I hired was very accommodating, however, he was inexperienced to handle my complicated immigration case. He did not tell us the truth of his qualification, or lack of. He was unclear of what steps he wanted us to take next after our I-485 initial application was denied. The second lawyer, whom we thought was a very experienced lawyer this time, gave up on us after our hardship waiver application and appeal were both denied. He always seemed too busy and didn't have time to re-examine our hardship waiver on why it got denied. After ensuring we paid all what we were supposed to pay for his service, he abruptly dropped our case. Then, we found our third lawyer who took us immediately under his counsel. He returned my phone call immediately and discussed our case with the USCIS. After he laid out the monthly retainer's fees and asked for a hefty down payment, he promised to help us with our immigration case. Then, he suggested we wait, which went on for several months. Meanwhile, the monthly bills kept coming and, since we thought we were in good hands, we kept on paying, including the hefty down payment for his service was also paid up front. Finally, he said he wanted us to see the IJ in person so that our case could be heard better, however, he did not say how. My husband and I were a little confused, but we trusted him, thinking that he might know a better way to resolve our immigration problem. Unfortunately, the wait was long and there was no IJ meeting. The last time we heard of him, his office was being investigated for massive fraud. It was at this point that our frustrations, increasing desperation and mistrust in finding an honest and capable immigration lawyer who could help us felt beyond our reach. While the most important issue was solving my immigration problem, the stress of our savings being drained for having paid exorbitant legal fees with no resolve in sight was also heartbreaking.

I believe an angel came to our rescue when we found on-line our fourth lawyer, Mr. David Asser. It was through the many positive testimonials written about him from his past clients that led me to call him. The price of not giving up in finding the best lawyer has paid us great rewards. My husband and I just wished we could have found Mr. Asser early on. He did not impress us by promising a positive result instantly, but he did show us compassion, honesty and an understanding of our difficulty. His main focus was to help us with our case in the simplest possible and positive way. He told us the truth of what to expect. At the same time he worked tirelessly and diligently to find every little chance according to the law we might have in getting our application approved. Our letters and e-mails were always received and phone calls were returned in a timely manner. After he examined and reviewed our case, he decided that we re-submit our application. The great difference this time was that we had to gather as much supporting documents as we could to give a stronger base for our case and with a backup plan. We did exactly what we were told and he did not give up on us, even if there were times we felt that we might not have a chance. To Mr. Asser, we were not just another case number or source of money who he could ignore as he pleases. Sure enough, Mr. Asser with his full knowledge of immigration laws succeeded and he got our application approved. He provided us with the best and professional immigration assistance we ever had in over ten years. His professional demeanor did not end with us, he was always professional and optimistic to the employees at USCIS office.

At last, my husband's petition was approved and I now have my GC. I cannot wait to attend my Naturalization Ceremony in a few years and this is all because of Mr. Asser's expertise in the field. While our plight in having our immigration application approved was long and stressful, our lives have changed for the better and Mr. Asser brought back our trust in both the legal and immigration system. My husband and I are very grateful for Mr. Asser's help and highly recommend him and his team to anyone anytime. To Mr. Asser and his team, thank you!
